

↔ Overall Trends

During Fiscal Year 2025, the number of Idaho residents under active supervision decreased by 1.7% compared to FY24. Both probation and parole populations decreased, by 6.0% and 3.2%, respectively.

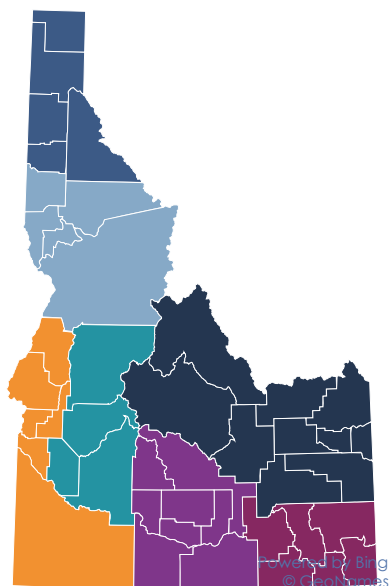

Supervision counts across most districts remained stable from the previous year, with one notable exception: the Low Supervision Unit grew by 15.5%. Demographic distributions by crime type, gender, and ethnicity remained consistent with FY24. However, there was a significant increase among individuals aged 18–24, while other age groups showed little change.

The active supervision population includes individuals in Idaho communities who are on probation or parole. It excludes those who are incarcerated, in federal custody, deported, detained by Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE), absconded, on parole violation status, on a bench warrant, or on unsupervised probation.
